Lona: Realm of Colors is a point and click adventure in nature focusing on art and narration instead of fetch puzzles and dialogue. Each level is an abstraction of Lona's story and it is up to you to bring peace and balance to her painting and find out what has happened to her. Each level has two sides: a chaotic side represented by Ms. Schmidt the cat and a dark side represented by Mr. Ruppel the crow. You can switch between the two worlds at will and try to bring balance to these extreme interpretations of a single situation. You can use items from each world in the other one and everything you do might affect both worlds. There will be 15 unique scenes from Lona's memory and paintings each having two sides. ### Features Key:

A unique steampunk game system. We've created this game system using the best game system components and rules already available.

Three races!

A variety of weapons and play options. Keep your players on their toes.

A vast amount of detail - all the rules you'll need to run your adventures.

A completely original, steampunk setting. No need to run the same game you already know.

A perfect homage to H. Rider Haggard's first creation, King Solomon's Mines!

Many thanks to Savage Dragon Game Studios for permission to use their rules, shown on the game key.

If you buy a copy of this game, you will be helping support this hobby in more ways than one. :)

What's new:

(Storming The Razor Caves part 3 of 3) (Freeport) I moved through the quadrangle tunnel into the cavern system as Blackfin and Hunkies flew above. I entered with a fully alert party and prepared to make my way through the dark path to the end of the long passageway. I had occupied the building on the north side of the cavern to the northeast from the start of the game. My goblins were with me. As I approached the end of the tunnel, I gazed left into a wide room fully lit by the torch I had stuck in the air. My warriors could see well enough to engage the enemy in the room ahead, where the fighting was intense. There was a narrow passageway that led to a balcony overlooking the room. There were six huge metal cages mounted on platforms to the right of the room and I told the orcs to capture one of the cages at random. They did. The cages were chained to the walls of the room. As the mob of orcs advanced, I scrambled across the room and grabbed the chain on one of the cages. I motioned for my warriors to follow me and we moved back to the tunnel. The cubs were left there. As we exited the tunnel, we took the chain with us, swinging it around to remove it from the wall it was attached to. We could now move along the narrow passageway, mounted at an angle. Just at the end of the passageway we ducked into a narrow window left-over from a time when a creative GM had already installed the windows and perched floor-level rooms inside the caverns. The dwarves followed but as I turned, ready to jump into the room inside, my eye caught movement from the corner of the room. "The north side of the room?" that corner was not traversible for orcs. I shouted for the dwarves to halt and back up, we responded by ducking back into the passageway where we could cast light more effectively. Coming into the passageway up ahead, we saw what was there. Abrantor, a huge fanatically devoted cleric, locked in a stalemate with a cleric of Tiamat. A third cleric of Tiamat helped him. His eyes were closed, out of focus, and some of his strength was gone. The other cleric was concentrating on a nearby mechanical monster. They were both on the ground and the mechanical
